Photo: shutterstock.com You don't need children to understand that good public schools support the value of homes in their district. And while higher quality schools are usually accompanied by higher property taxes, homeowners in such districts are eventually refunded by a higher home sale price. Being refunded sounds good, but how much do we talk? New research from Realtor.com shows that 9% of buyers say they will pay 11% to 20% above the budget. Separately, 17% report that they would pay extra to be close enough that their children could walk to and from school. Realtor.com found that 62% of buyers would pass a home father if it meant getting into the right school district. 50% would grant easy access to shopping, while 44% would give up space in the form of a bonus room. If the house you intend to sell is located in a highly sophisticated school district, do everything in your power to highlight that fact in all your property marketing material. Many potential buyers are the parents of children currently in the school system, so be sure to get the word out among neighbours and local friends. If you buy a house, use a search tool that enables you to filter through the school district, as district boundaries do not always align with town, town and city lines in lines. After all, you cannot accept that your children will be assigned to attend the same school as the children at the block or even next door. H. Armstrong Roberts/ClassicStock/ArchivePhotos/Getty Images To find the school district associated with any home address in the United States, go to GreatSchools.org, and enter the address in the interactive School District and Borders Map. Then, find the school district name to get the district phone number, and call the district to confirm. After clicking GreatSchools.org to get the district name, visit the district's website. Many public school districts have interactive school finder applications that allow families to enter their home address and get a list of corresponding elementary, middle and secondary schools. At the very least, most have cards that are district border lines. It is useful to take this step as school district attendance areas can shift from year to year so that information from neighbours, realtors and other local sources may not be accurate. In addition, most state departments of education lists of each district in the state alphabetically organized by the name, or numerically by district number, and often have maps showing border lines for each district. Here you can also find district demographics, average test scores, school ratings and other useful information. As a final confirmation step, call the school district office, and ask to which will help to speak the appropriate school for child in the family. A Maryland school district has turned into the Grinch Who Stole Christmas - or at least the Grinch who has removed Christmas from the school calendar. The Montgomery County Board of Education, whose district borders the nation's capital, voted 7-1 this week to scrub references to Christmas and all other religious holidays from its published school calendar. Today The move is partly asked by requests from Muslim leaders who have requested that the schools perceive at least one of the Muslim holy days. The district currently includes several Jewish and Christian holidays, but next year the Muslim holidays Eid Al Adha joined Yom Kippur on Sept. 23, 2015, and Muslim leaders asked it to be recognised on the school calendar. With Tuesday's school board vote, students still get time off for winter breaks in December, or spring break around Easter, as well as Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, who will now be listed as no school days. This decision was made to emphasise that the decision to close school on a particular day is based on operational matters – such as high staff and student absence – and not for religious or cultural reasons, the district said in a statement after the meeting. The decision caused backlash in the Montgomery County school district among people who felt the school board had gone too far, or simply did not handle the issue appropriately. Merry Eisner-Heidorn, who has two children in a district high school, called the situation the latest absurdity of the school board. She said while there is value in the new calendar, the decision was handled poorly. The Muslim community asked for equity, she wrote in a Facebook post. Now there are people who use this decision to smash Islam and Muslims in America who no longer or less have done than any segment of America's population — and plead for recognition. Kym Porter, whose three children attend Montgomery County District Schools, questioned why the board leaned so heavily in one direction. Every year I get academic calendars from Staples and they list Christmas, Hannukah, Eid, Ashura, Kwanzaa, Administrative Professional Day and different Mexican holidays, she told today. I understand the 'everything or nothing' idea, but why not everyone? Reactions on Twitter were strong, but widely chaltched about the political County school board members pointed out that the nearby Fairfax County school system, the largest school district in neigh-neigh-14 Virginia, also does not mention religious holidays by name.
